Faculty of Science and Letters has been providing education since its establishment in 2003. There are currently 14 departments within the faculty, nine of which are actively accepting new admissions every year. The departments within the faculty are constantly updated and developed to better adapt to the demands of the modern field business spaces and professions that change in tandem with the emerging developments across the World. Each and every department offers students with applications and programs that would increase their values as members of society while contributing to their information and skills.

Our faculty conducts intensive learning mobility by making national and international agreements within the scope of active Erasmus and Mevlana Exchange Program and national exchange agreements under the Farabi Exchange Program.

The departments in our faculty have double major programs themselves and with departments of other faculties.

Education on Master's and Doctorate level is offered to students in physics, mathematics, literature, biology and history departments, and there are Master's programs in philosophy, contemporary Turkish dialects and literature departments.

Our graduates represent our university and faculty as individuals who can work in various fields of social life, think critically, inquire, researcher, open to change and development, and aim to raise productive and creative individuals.
